Serena Viola

pp 128, 19X26 cm, Ill. Col. 50

A new fascinating book by the writer with ironical narration style, capable of engaging young reader's attention.

The Invisible Line of Nature

Nature is a very complex system of invisible interactions and whenever a person interferes with it, can produce unpredictable effect. This book is about entertaining stories involving natural and bizarre events caused by human beings: a collection of historical events that took place in several parts of the world at different periods, but mostly still unknown in all their implications and developments. An interesting and pleasant reading for becoming aware about the delicate equilibrium between nature and human beings, which involves anything and anyone. Gianumberto Accinelli, a well-known science writer with an ironical narration style, is capable of engaging young reader's attention through exciting episodes about the natural world complete of scientific data and historical facts.

Some examples of the adventures narrated by Gian Umberto Accinelli are: The butterfly that saved the Australian Continent, Operation cat drop. It's raining cats!

Gianumberto Accinelli was born in 1969 in the town of Bologna. He obtained a degree in agriculture and a PhD studying biological control techniques and applied ecology with professor and Giorgio Celli Stefano Maini. In 2005 he founded the start up Eugea to bring back butterflies within cities. He spent long periods studying and teaching in the United States and in the Republic of Haiti He has also been Professor of Applied Entomology at the University of Bologna and at the University of Anghiari. Now he coordinates Eugea project and gives lessons about nature all over Italy schools. He also leads a radio program and National TV.
